Security and Intelligence Studies Journal: Volume 1 Number 3 Security and Intelligence Studies Journal
The Security and Intelligence Studies Journal is the world's first undergraduate research publication specializing exclusively in the areas of intelligence, security, terrorism/counterterrorism, geopolitics, and international relations. It is published at King University in Tennessee, USA, under the auspices of the Office of Student Affairs and the King Institute for Security and Intelligence Studies. For its third issue, the SIS Journal has selected some of the finest undergraduate writing on the subject: "Security, Intelligence, and the Scientific Discipline". The success of the national security enterprise relies heavily on collaborative work by highly trained and motivated specialists, who are able to share their expertise in creative and innovative ways. The increasing complexity and technical prowess of national and international security threats have elevated scientific and technological concerns into central parameters of national security. This volume explores the expanding intersection between security, intelligence, and the scientific discipline, and proposes approaches and solutions to scientific or technical problems facing the intelligence and security communities.
